

TROOP B OF OGDEN APPRECIATES KINDNESS

Nogales, Ariz., Sept. 13, 1916.
"The Ogden Standard—Among various deeds of kindness and pleasant gifts that the people of Ogden have sent to Troop B, we wish to make special mention of the very generous gift that was afforded by Sergeant Sherwood's parents and the people of Five Points.
"This evening every man in the troop received a two-pound bag of 'Utah-made' candy, and a delicious package of chewing gum. You can well imagine how this was relished.
"It is true that the soldier of today does not have to put up with the discomforts and disadvantages that encumbered the soldiers of years gone by. Our accommodations for eating and resting are one hundred per cent better than they were then.
"To list the various dishes that have been served to us, would take up a large part of one of these columns. And we have every reason to be thankful, and the more so because our friends at home have carried out their resolves which they made when they were under the influence of the inspired speakers who addressed the throng on that memorable day—the day of our farewell repast.
"We all hope that Troop B will be an honor to our city, state and nation. Not only in the military service that we have affirmed to be faithful, but we intend to honor our loved ones at home, in every respect.
"We are kept busy, which, as you will well understand, is the preservation of our health and contentment. These endless stretches of cactus-covered hills sometimes weary us, when we think of the great distance that separates us from home and friends.
"But all our difficulties are eliminated and our troubles forgotten when we receive our mail, and get good encouraging news. When our folks at home send us good reports and many enjoyable delicacies.
"We wish to thank each and every person who has done the least to make life more pleasant for us while we have been away from home. May every gift bring increased assurance of our speedy return home.
"A greater Utah, a better Ogden, and a more loyal Troop B, is the aim of every trooper.
(Signed) "TROOP B, UT. CAV."

SHORT-CHANGE MAN CAUGHT AT THEATRE

William McCarty, a clever crook, came to grief Saturday night when he attempted an old, but not lately used, short-change game on Miss Ann Skinner, cashier at the Alhambra theatre. Due to Miss Skinner's quick-wittedness, the fellow is now in the city jail facing several criminal charges.

McCarty approached the Alhambra boxoffice about 9:30 o'clock and purchased a ticket for the motion picture show from Mrs. Peter Lammers, a sister of Ann Skinner, cashier of the theatre, who was nearby. He tendered a $10 gold piece in payment for the ticket and was given $9.50 in change. As he started to leave the window, he asked:
"Are you sure I gave you $10? I thought it was fifty cents."
He was advised that it was $10 and he then moved back out of the line until the space before the ticket window was clear again. Returning to the window and, producing $5.50 in change, he said to Mrs. Lammers:
"Just give me the $10 gold piece. I did not need to change it."

Other people were waiting to purchase tickets and as the man seemed to be in a hurry, he was given the $10 gold piece for the money he returned. This, when counted, was found to be short the original $5 gold piece she had given the man, the $5.50 being in silver.

Miss Skinner, who had witnessed the whole transaction, followed McCarty into the theatre. Approaching him, she asked if he was the man who had made the mistake at the window. He answered in the negative and then added that the man she was looking for had taken a seat a couple of rows ahead of him.

"No, you are the man," the young lady insisted, and feeling that it was useless to further deny his identity, McCarty answered:
"Well, I will get the money for you." He then arose and walking down the aisle a short distance stopped near a man and then returned to Miss Skinner. He gave her the $5 gold piece and resumed his seat.

A few minutes later, Miss Skinner met Patrolman Dan Sullivan in the lobby of the theatre and related the circumstances of the case to him. Recognizing them as similar to a case upon which the department had been working for several days, the officer reported to headquarters and was joined at the theatre by Detective Alex Fife. When McCarty was leaving the theatre, he was pointed out to the two officers by Miss Skinner and placed under arrest.

At the police station, it was found that the hat he was wearing was one stolen from the Buchmiller & Flowers store while an attempt was being made by the thief to work the "short-change" game there Saturday morning.
Several other merchants reported similar cases to the police.

New Plant of the Ogden Packing & Provision Company

COLD STORAGE PLANT AND CUTTING ROOMS.

PRESENT PLANT IN REAR. FOUNDATION FOR MAIN BUILDING.

TANK HOUSE OF NEW PLANT.

POWER PLANT.

With a view of completing the new additions to the Ogden Packing & Provision company plant early in November, James Stewart & Company are now pushing the foundation work for the main building, the central unit of the structures. This has been left as the last work on the additions, as the construction necessitates the entire removal of the old power house and old tank house used in connection with the present plant.

To take the place of these divisions of the present plant, the new tank house and power plant have both been completed and are now practically ready for occupancy. The contractors anticipate that the central unit of the buildings will be finished with rapidity.

Work is now in progress on every unit of the buildings and also on the trackage, men being employed in finishing the power house and the tank house, in erecting the walls of the cold storage division, placing foundations for the main building, building loading platforms at both the present and new plants and changing the railroad trackage, the total number of construction employees being about 175 men in addition to nearly 200 regular employees in the packing plant itself.

IMPROVED METHODS FOR HANDLING SHEEP RELIGIOUS LIFE HAS ITS THRILLS, SAYS MINISTER

Excellent results from the experiments in handling sheep on the forest ranges of southern Utah under improved grazing methods are reported by J. T. Jardine, inspector of grazing from the Washington offices, and Ark Anderson, who have returned to Ogden district headquarters from the forests of Sevier and San Pete valleys.

The improved methods of grazing comprise the rotary system of grazing, whereby the sheep are allowed to graze on one portion of the range one season and another the next, and the "bedding out" system, which conserves the range by the fact that the sheep are allowed to bed on the range wherever night overtakes them, instead of being brought into camp at nightfall, as practiced under the old system of sheep raising. The fact sheep seldom bed in the same place more than twice in succession removes the possibility of killing the forage.

The experiment with the improved methods is being conducted by the forest service in co-operation with livestock men residing in the southern part of the state. Four herds of sheep are being used. Another herd of the wool bearers is being cared for under the old system. The contrast shown in results finds heavier and stronger sheep produced at a decreased cost to stockmen and range alike under the improved system. Arrangements for the demonstration were made last spring when Mr. Anderson, in company of Dr. Dallas of the bureau of animal industry with headquarters at Provo, made a lecture tour of those two counties. Mr. Anderson then explained that the improved methods of handling sheep had proved a success in Idaho, Wyoming and Montana forests and that the methods had been adopted by the stockmen of those sections of the intermountain district with the result that they are getting more for their sheep, produce them at a decreased cost and at the same time conserve the range lands for future use. Dr. Dallas' part in the lecture campaign was to demonstrate improved methods for keeping sheep free from disease.

RELIGIOUS LIFE HAS ITS THRILLS, SAYS MINISTER

Rev. J. E. Carver, in his Sunday sermon, said:

"The history of the martyrs relates the story of one Ardelis, an actor in the days of the third century in Rome. He was an expert in mocking the serious phases of the Christian religion. One of his most popular acts was the representation of the Christian before the judgment throne as he remembered it from hearing a popular early preacher describe it. One night, as Ardelis was acting it before the emperor, he became convinced of the truth of what he had often burlesqued. His manner became so intense that the emperor applauded and praised him, but to Ardelis it was not matter for applause. He was so intense that he heard it not. That was his last night on the royal stage. It was in the days when to openly espouse the Christian religion was to invite death. The intensity of the last acting so charmed the emperor that he asked for Ardelis to act it again. Thinking it an opportunity, Ardelis accepted and in his acting endeavored to convince the ruler of the justness and rightness of the cause of the Christ. His sincerity won his doom. He was tried for publicly teaching the Christian religion and suffered martyrdom about 300 A. D.

"There is something in this that is akin to our modern life. Many a man and woman plays along with the realities of life and uses the verities as jests and conveniences until something very real happens and then all that was fiction becomes solid reality. Life is a getting and a gaining and an enjoyment until somehow the fact that the best gain and the richest joy is that of the soul, is made known to them. Then we see a Billy Sunday, a John B. Gough and a Dwight L. Moody tell the world in an earnest life how very real are the joys of service and how rich the gain of the Christ can become. If you never knew the lust of joy or gain, you will be an indifferent Christian. If you realize the charm of living and know not the Christ, you have the best thrills yet before you. God has never been surpassed in the giving of the best. The one who knows nothing of it. Only those who neither know nor trust the Christ, do not love and serve him. Only the persons who have only tasted the worldly ways or have half tried the godly path will tell you religion is dull.

CITIZENS INSIST ON AN EXECUTION

Cheyenne, Wyo., Sept. 17.—The unusual situation of residents of one state protesting to another state against clemency for a murderer may be presented if the Colorado state board of pardons is petitioned to commute to life imprisonment the punishment of Clyde B. Pearson, who is under sentence to be hanged at Canyon City the week beginning October 22 for the murder of Sheriff Frank R. Roach of this county. If an appeal for a commutation is presented in Pearson's case it is highly probable that friends here of the murdered sheriff will petition the Colorado pardons board to disregard it, and will send representatives and urge that the law be permitted to take its course in Pearson's case.

Pearson's mother has arrived at Fort Collins from Coffeyville, Kan., and is endeavoring to induce court officials and members of the jury which convicted Pearson and set his punishment at death to sign a petition for commutation of his sentence to life imprisonment. While deeply sympathetic with the mother of the murderer, the hundreds of friends here of Roach, who was one of the best officers Wyoming ever has known, feel that her solicitude for her son should not be permitted to interfere with the punishment of the perpetrator of one of the most cowardly and inexcusable assassinations in the history of the Rock mountain region.

Roach was shot down by Pearson last May after he had chased Pearson and Cornelius Gray across the Colorado line, following their theft of three horses at the ranch of Hans Neilson, in Wyoming. Neilson, foreman of the Neilson ranch, also was killed, Gray shooting him at the command of Pearson. Poses sent from Cheyenne immediately after receipt here of the news of the killing failed to arrive in time to capture the slayers before Sheriff Cooke of Fort Collins had taken them into custody. Had only been captured by a Wyoming posse it is highly probable that they never would have reached Cheyenne and that their trial at Fort Collins would have been unnecessary.

Had the killing of Roach and Neilson occurred a few miles farther north, in Wyoming, and had the prisoners been brought to trial here, there would have been no possibility of escape or escaping the gallows. Wyoming people are following their cases closely, believing that Colorado should exercise no more clemency in regard to them than they would have been accorded had they committed their crime in Roach's jurisdiction, and that the finding of the unpardoned Fort Collins jury that Pearson should be hanged and Gray imprisoned for life should not be tampered with by the Colorado pardons board.
